

HOTMA Resident Fact Sheet: Asset and Real Property Limitations

This fact sheet is for families who live in public housing or have Housing Choice Vouchers from Section 8 (HCV). There are new rules that limit the assets and property that families can have when applying to and, in some cases, participating in these housing programs. The new rules are based on a federal law, the Housing Opportunity Through Modernization Act of 2016 (HOTMA). These changes begin at RHA with all rental rates with an effective date of January 1, 2027 or after. This fact sheet is not official guidance or required by HUD or your PHA.

New rules from HUD (the Department of Housing and Urban Development) say that families living in public housing and participating in the housing choice voucher program (HCV or Section 8) cannot have more than $109,797* worth of net family assets. Also, participating families may not own a home that they could live in. Meet with your property manager if you live in pubic housing and own a home you could live in or if you own assets worth more than $109,797. There are notable exceptions to these rules!

These new rules apply to all new applicants to public housing and Section 8. PHAs must deny applicants with assets or property that are over the limit.

RHA public housing policy for applying this new rules to existing residents at annual and interim reviews. Through a written policy, the RHA can choose to meet with the family to determine if RHA will:

- Not enforce the limits at all for existing residents.
- Strictly enforce the limits.
- Enforce the limits but allow residents time to come into compliance.
- Have exceptions to the limits.

Most families will not be impacted by the asset limitation rules. If you're not sure, request a meeting with your property manager to review your assets value and see how these new rules apply to you.

Assets

Assets refer to anything valuable you own, such as jewelry, stocks, tools, artwork, or a vehicle. A common asset is real property (real estate), such as land or housing. "Net family assets" refers to the cash value of all assets owned by the family, after subtracting any money you owe on the assets and any reasonable costs that you would have to pay to sell them. Although the new rules say that you can only have assets up to

* As adjusted annually for inflation.

This material is based upon work supported, in whole or in part, by Federal award number C-20-TA-TX-0010 awarded to NALCAB by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. The substance and findings of the work are dedicated to the public. Neither the United States Government, nor any of its employees, makes any warranty, express or implied, or assumes any legal liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness, or usefulness of any information, apparatus, product, or process disclosed, or represents that its use would not infringe privately-owned rights. Reference herein to any individuals, agencies, companies, products, process, services, service by trade name, trademark, manufacturer, or otherwise does not constitute or imply an endorsement, recommendation, or favoring by the author(s), contributor(s),the U.S. Government or any agency thereof. Opinions contained herein are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the official position of, or a position that is endorsed by, HUD or any Federal agency.

$100,000* in value, there are many things that HUD has excluded. Anything that's excluded is not counted toward the net family assets total.

Some common examples of assets that are excluded from the total limit of $109,797* include:

- Necessary items. Items you need to keep up, use, and live in your home or that you need for work, education, or health. This might be a car that you use to get to work, an expensive medical device, or a laptop you use for school. Whether a specific item is considered "necessary" will depend on the family's circumstances. HUD has provided guidance in Notice PIH 2023-27.
- Non-necessary items of personal property, if the combined total value is not more than $50,000*. Examples include: a recreational boat, coin collection, or antique jewelry. This will include most assets you own that are not a home (see the section below) or a necessary item. To get this exemption, the total value of all these items must be $50,000* or less.
- Retirement accounts. This covers IRS-recognized retirement plans, such as an IRA, 403(b), or 401(k). The value of the account is not included as an asset.
- Educational savings accounts. This includes IRS-recognized educational savings and tuition accounts, as well as any "baby bonds" programs funded by federal, state, or local governments.
- Interest in Indian trust land. Interest in land held in a trust by the Bureau of Indian Affairs cannot be counted towards the asset limitations.
- Tax refunds and credits for 12 months after they are received. This includes the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC).
- Equity in a home owned through the HCV homeownership program, or a manufactured home when the family receives HCV assistance to rent the space.
- Property that you cannot legally sell. This could include property that is the subject of a legal dispute.

Certification: If the assets you own add up to less than $54,898*, including land or property, RHA may accept a self-certification when you move-in and two out of every three years. RHA considers a full review of assets to be one complete monthly statement from the financial institution if the household does not own more than HUD's annual self-certification threshold of assets which is currently $54,898. RHA will accept a self-certification. RHA does allow self-certification if your assets do not exceed $54,898* to share how much income you expect to earn from those assets. RHA will fully verify assets every year for households who own more than HUD's annual posted Asset Verification threshold by collecting three consequtive and complete monthly statements from each financial institution.

You can use the HOTMA Assets, Asset Exclusions, and Limitation on Assets Resource Sheet to help you determine the value of your assets.

Real Property

The new rules state that residents may not own property that is "suitable" for them to live in, with some exceptions. This is separate from the $109,797* net family assets limitation. If you own a property that you cannot live in, its value may still be included in your net family assets (explained above).

Several factors affect whether a house is suitable to live in. If you cannot live in the home, then owning it will not affect your eligibility for the housing program, unless the value puts you above the asset limit.

* As adjusted annually for inflation.

A property may not be suitable for your family to live in if it:

- Is unsafe because of its condition (unless the issues can be easily fixed).
- Does not meet the disability-related needs of your family. For example, the house has too many stairs or is not close to public transportation.
- Is in a location that would cause hardship. For example, the house is located too far from your work or school.
- Is not big enough for your family.
- Is not a home you are legally allowed to live in. For example, a building in an area zoned for commercial use only.

The limit on owning a home does not apply if you:

- Get assistance for that home under the Housing Choice Voucher Program.
- Co-own that home with someone who lives in it (and that person is not part of your family in the housing program).
- Are currently selling the home.
- Are a victim of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, or stalking. (This includes any member of your family.)

What happens if RHA finds that your assets value more than $109,797* or you own a home that you could live in?

RHA policy for public housing will be determined based upon the type asset and property limits.

If you own a home that you could live in, RHA offers an option to fix the issues (cure): RHA will enforce the limits but will allow families up to 6 months to come into compliance. That means you will have 6 months to fix the issue so that you are no longer over the asset or property limit. How you do this will depend on what assets or property you have. You may be able to transfer money to an account that is not included as an asset (like a retirement account) or sell your home that you could live in. Contact your RHA property manager for an asset review and determination of your assets value and liveable assessment.

RHA does not enforce the asset limit that is not associated to a home that you could live in: RHAs public houisng policy is not enforce the asset limit if it is unrelated to real estate that you could live in. In that case, being “out of compliance” with this rule will not affect you. However, you will need to meet with your RHA property manager for an asset review and determination to calculate the value of your assets.

Exceptions: As a part of their policy, RHA has established exceptions to the asset and property limits based on certain traits like age, disability, or income. For example, RHA will strictly enforce the real estate policy, except for families that are considered elderly, disabled or verified as extremely-low income. For those families, RHA's public housing policy is not to enforce the asset limits.

For related resources see:
hudexchange.info/programs/hotma/hotma-income-and-assets/#resident-resources

* As adjusted annually for inflation.